A Modern New Retreat in Miami

Three Hundred Collins is bringing an ultra-luxe aesthetic to Miami's hottest neighborhood

Written by The Editors of DuJour

Based in New York, JMH Development knew it needed a Miami insider for Three Hundred Collins, a boutique building in the South of Fifth neighborhood. They found their man in Thomas Juul-Hansen, a Dane who studied architecture at University of Miami. "He's familiar with the city's unique architectural landscape," says managing partner Jason Halpern, who describes Juul-Hansen's 19-unit modern retreat of glass, white oak and stone as a work of art. "I'm especially fond of the rooftop deck's 75-foot saltwater pool."
