

VIEW SLIDESHOW

'Tis the season of giving—and some gifts are more than they seem. For the altruist in your life, perhaps you want to give a gift that also gives back to the environment, the less fortunate, or programs that help the community.

To that end, we have rounded up a handful of experiences, products, and large-scale items from some of our favorite brands. Purchase a Miami Beach condo where proceeds bring clean drinking water to millions, or consider shipping a family member to the Maldives to aid with its turtle-conservation program. Each of these venerable gifts from the heart ensures you are rolling in good karma long after the season has passed.

And if you're looking for more luxury gift ideas, check out the complete Robb Report Ultimate Gift Guide for 2017, which includes inspirations in every category from cars to watches to fashion, to travel, and more.

#5

Sustainable Living

Three Hundred Collins, Miami Beach
Photo: Courtesy JMH Development

Front facade

Price: From $1.7 million to more than $9 million

Developer Jason Halpern of JMH Development is passionate about making a mark in the world—not only through his boutique buildings but also through his charitable giving. For his most recent residential project, Three Hundred Collins—a 19-unit glass structure designed by Thomas Juul-Hansen and located in Miami Beach’s posh South of Fifth neighborhood—Halpern is donating $20,000 per each unit sold to Charity: Water. The New York–based nonprofit has brought clean, safe drinking water to more than seven million people, and 100 percent of the donations will fund additional projects in developing countries.

Three two- to four-bedroom units are still available at the ultramodern Florida property and feature white oak floors, stone finishes, floor-to-ceiling windows, custom Juul-Hansen kitchens, and wraparound terraces. Priced from $1.7 million to more than $9 million, the residences are on track to be completed this winter.